++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Another showery day for most.

Today:
Some sunny spells, but showers affecting many areas, heavy and locally thundery this afternoon, and slow-moving across parts of Scotland. Breezy across southern parts with temperatures a little below average for August.

Tonight:
Showers mostly dying out to allow clear spells, but some more persistent rain affecting parts of Scotland, Northern Ireland and southern England.

Monday:
Another day of sunny spells and showers, some of which will be heavy with thunder and hail in places.

Outlook for Tuesday to Thursday:
Less unsettled with showers gradually dying away to leave sunny spells. Further rain, and locally strong winds, arriving later Wednesday from the west, moving east and southeast. Rather warm.
